

Search the Times Colonist

Subscribe Manage Subscriptions

B.C. National World

LATEST NEWS: Three drown, one rescued in capsizing of fishing boat off Tofino

CBC unearths controversy as Island First Nations artifact considered for TV

KATHERINE DEDYNA / TIMES COLONIST JULY 5, 2013 09:54 PM

Email Print

Jewel Kizuk, a cake maker from Comox, shows her 2,000-year-old native artifact to producer Charlie Smith from the new CBC TV reality show Four Rooms.

Comox cake-maker Jewel Kizuk brought a rare, ancient First Nations artifact to Victoria during the last week of June to be considered for a new CBC TV reality show based on buying and selling unique objects.

The bowl, up to 2,000 years old, is well known as the Harris Bowl, named for Kizuk's father, who found it in his Qualicum Beach backyard in 1988, says Grant Keddie, curator of archeology at the Royal B.C. Museum.

He said he was shocked to see that the CBC would be involved in promoting a show that could merchandise ancient artifacts. "Instead of emphasizing the bowl's knowledge value, it emphasizes monetary value. We're really against creating a market for ancient artifacts."

Kizuk's bowl was likely used for ritual purposes by what is now the Qualicum First Nations, and was found on their traditional territory, Keddie said. It was documented by an RBCM collections technologist more than 20 years ago, but current technology could likely pinpoint what it had contained, he added.

Qualicum First Nation officials said they are horrified a culturally significant item like the bowl would be part of such a program. They said the bowl should be offered to them or given to the museum for safekeeping.

The Ministry of Forests, Lands and Natural Resources, which is responsible for heritage conservation in B.C., also has raised issues.

"The archeology branch is concerned that offering such items for sale, and attaching a monetary value to them, will promote illegal collection of artifacts and illegal excavations in protected archeological sites," said a ministry spokesman. "We are therefore respectfully requesting that this item not be offered at auction."

There are only about 50 such figurines in a huge swath of land from Puget Sound, the Island and the Fraser Valley, and nearly half of them are broken, Keddie said. "Each one of these is unique," he added.

He would never estimate how much such a bowl would be worth because he's concerned about antiques dealers and speculation and trade in items he would rather see in a museum.

"Our museum does not purchase archeological material," Keddie said. "And if someone phones us and asks what it's worth, we don't tell."

Among the rare aspects of the Harris Bowl is that its face looks neither human nor animal but mask-like "which is kind of neat," Keddie said. What appears to be a snake goes up the back of the figure's spine.

"This thing is made of really coarse material," he said. "It took a lot of ingenuity to make this thing with stone tools." He believes it was acquired by Kizuk from her father around 2008.

It is illegal under B.C.'s Heritage Conservation Act of 1994 to remove objects from a protected site without a permit from the province's archeology branch.

Branch director Justine Batten said the timelines associated with the bowl — found before the act was put in place — limit what can be done. "The province's only option would be to designate the bowl as a provincial heritage object, which would preclude the object from leaving the province but not from being sold. However, this artifact is not considered a good candidate for designation because the owners are unwilling."

Keddie added that the bowl can't leave the country without going through a permit process. "And the person selling it has to prove that they cannot find a Canadian buyer."

The CBC show, called Four Rooms, is scheduled to premiere in January. It involves four dealers of rare objects who examine items and then retire to their rooms, where the owners of the items are invited to make a deal.

Kizuk said many times during an interview that she has no agenda for the artifact, which she praises as "a beautiful piece of history that should be shared." She has no idea if the bowl will even be selected for the show and she is under no obligation to sell it, she stressed.

In her view, Four Rooms is more about showing objects to a cross-Canada audience than selling them. "It's just a show. It's just for fun."

The CBC website says Four Rooms is seeking "stunning, iconic or unusual" items for chances "to make the deal of a lifetime."

"CBC producers are on the hunt for Canadians looking to sell their family heirlooms and one-of-a-kind collections to four of the country's top art, antique and memorabilia buyers."

CBC spokesman Chuck Thompson said the producers of the show have seen "literally hundreds of objects" during their tour of the country, including art, antiques and memorabilia.

"They certainly won't shy away from anything controversial. In fact, they'll tackle head-on the reasons why individuals have those objects in their possession, how they got them and why they want to sell them."

All of that will be on camera, Thompson said.

"It's fair to say we'll discuss the ethics of dealing in controversial items, and more to the point in no way will Four Rooms glorify any controversial items or encourage selling practices that are deemed to be illegal or immoral," he said.

Kizuk was one of 22 people who brought their treasures to the Victoria Marriott Inner Harbour. Finalists are expected to be contacted by July 16 and flown to Toronto to record episodes.

kdedyna@timescolonist.com

— With files from Jeff Bell

© Copyright Times Colonist

Related to this story

- CBC comes digging for treasures in Victoria Let your 'quirky life' shine

NEXT STORY Yacht hunted subs, brought down Washington governor

Comments

NOTE: To post a comment you must have an account with at least one of the following services: Disqus, Facebook, Twitter, Google+ You may then login using your account credentials for that service.

The Times Colonist welcomes your opinions and comments. We do not allow personal attacks, offensive language or unsubstantiated allegations.

Comments for this thread are now closed.

2 Comments Times Colonist Login

Recommend Share Sort by Newest

Andi H. - 2 years ago I'm glad to see someone picked up on what CBC is really doing: promoting the unethical and (sadly only "sort of") illegal trade of artifacts.

ALSO ON TIMES COLONIST

Island students visit refugee camp in Turkey, learn about Syrians' plight

11 comments • 2 days ago Mick — Bringing a lot here won't help. What about next year, then the next one, then the next one.?

Jack Knox: The summer that was: Duffy, Trump and fires

15 comments • 2 days ago wetcoastace — Baloo, "Your show is not being renewed due to its low ratings".

University of Victoria offers course on Beyoncé

24 comments • 4 days ago Andrew Hill — That'll look great on your resume for Mcdonalds

Cyclist clung to underside of moving truck to avoid being crushed

36 comments • 4 days ago JB — Along that section of West Saanich road, it is extremely likely that the cyclist was riding on the shoulder. When the truck slowed down to turn right, it would have ...

Subscribe Add Disqus to your site Privacy

DISQUS

Capital HOME Water READ THE SECOND ISSUE OF CAPITAL HOME With a focus on life by the water.

Don't Miss » daily

- Your daily horoscope Today's obituaries Daily crossword online E-edition of today's newspaper Sign up for the free newsletter

TC GET THE TIMES COLONIST DAILY NEWSLETTER Get the day's top Times Colonist headlines emailed to you every day at 9 a.m.

Featured Blogs

Woman on the Run Running While Drinking Beer or What I Did on my Summer Holiday I lift my chin up to catch the lightly falling...

Product Recalls Bicycle steering, airbags, wipers, raw shellfish, cooked chicken wings An archive of recall notices recently sent to...

Spiritually Speaking Don't allow fear to influence your decisions I find it interesting that when the angels...

Times Colonist 14,956 likes Like Page Share

3 friends like this

Times Colonist on Twitter

- Times Colonist @timescolonist UPDATE — Fishing vessel capsizes off Tofino: Three drown, one rescued shares/1vialE #yyj
- Times Colonist @timescolonist Surging Blue Jays use the long ball to beat Orioles shares/1vinzq #yyj
- Times Colonist @timescolonist Fishing vessel capsizes off Tofino: Two drown, one rescued, one missing shares/1vzOeA #yyj
- Times Colonist @timescolonist Fiji overwhelms Canada in Rugby World Cup warmup shares/1vzd67 #yyj
- Times Colonist @timescolonist Tweet to @timescolonist

Community Event Calendar

September 2015 calendar grid showing dates 1-12.

Find out what's happening in your community and submit your own local events. Add an event See all community events

Most Popular

Top News Top Business Top Sports

Fire damages heritage house in Rockland

Three drown, one rescued in capsizing of fishing boat off Tofino

Saanich police hunt for man accidentally released from jail

Homeless of Kings Park hold barbecue for neighbours

Yacht hunted subs, brought down Washington governor

University of B.C. students get lesson in cost of housing

Conservative who reportedly urinated into coffee cup 'deeply regrets' actions

Mann Cup: Lakers hit back against off-key Victoria Shamrocks

Conservatives drop candidate who made prank calls, posted videos online

What to do: Blues Bash, Saanich Fair, Greek Fest, Puppets for Peace

Your timescolonist.com

You might like Most discussed

Saanich Police Hunt For Man Accidentally Released From Jail

House On Fire In Rockland

University Of B.C. Students Get Lesson In Cost Of Housing

Three Die As Commercial Fishing Boat Sinks North Of Tofino

Many Happy Returns For Federer In US Open Victory Over Isner

Mann Cup: Lakers Hit Back Against Off-key Victoria Shamrocks

EXTRA! EXTRA! JOIN OUR FLYER DELIVERY TEAM GET A JOB DELIVERING TC FLYERS The Times Colonist is looking for people to deliver flyers every Thursday...

NEWS AND TOOLS

- Life Car Listings News Properties For Sale Obituaries Place An Ad Newspaper Ads Infomart Job Listings

OTHER

- MyLOCALFLYERS.ca Contact Us About Us Advertise With Us Subscribe Terms And Conditions Victoria Early Years Sponsorship Information

CONNECT

BACK TO TOP

